| 1      |      | #1 Memoir: Identity, Community, and Culture. | 1. Read and discuss sample memoirs. Some examples include:
   a. "Fish Cheeks" by Amy Tan
   b. "My First Conk" by Malcolm X
   c. "Eleven" by Sandra Cisneros
   d. "Everyday Use" by Alice Walker
2. Review the different structures of memoirs, using the mentor texts as guides (chronological, flashbacks, etc.)
3. Discuss what culture means.
4. List the features of our cultures.
5. Using a web-outline, brainstorm and identify personal strengths, goals, and selfhood that stem from aspects of our culture.
6. Start writing an outline or draft of memoir. | Students will be able to:
   - Identify important personal attributes/qualities about themselves and discuss what their culture means to them.
   - Read and review mentor texts. |
| 2      |      | Editing Day | Editing and finalizing of Lesson #1 | Submit final draft of Lesson #1 |
| 3      |      | #2 Poetry: Where I’m From | 1. Read Langston Hughes’s “Juke Box Love Song” focusing on Harlem and his sense of place.
2. Discussion
   a. How would we describe Durham?
   b. How do you talk about where you are from?
   c. How has it shaped you?
3. Give students the sentence stem: “Where I’m From” and ask them to write poems about their city, past, culture, family, or other places they associate with their identities. | Students will be able to:
   - Write “Where I’m From” poems exploring their relationship to Durham or their childhood growing up.
   - Students will practice community advocacy in considering their role in their cities. |
| 4      |      | Editing Day | Editing and finalizing of Lesson #2 | Submit final draft of Lesson #2 |
| 5      |      | #3 Expository Essay: MLK Essay: Setting Strong Blueprints | 1. Read aloud MLK’s “What is your Life’s Blueprint” speech together.
2. Using highlighters or pens, highlight or underline a quote from the speech that resonates with their lives and experiences.
3. Discuss why they chose those | Students will be able to:
   - Review a primary source document to make connections to their present day lives
   - Respond to mentor |
